REGISTER NOW FOR STATEALERT

StateAlert automatically delivers emergency warnings direct to your community when lives may be in danger. It has been developed by FESA and WA Police on behalf of the State Government as part of its ongoing commitment to effective emergency management

The system uses mapping technology to deliver warnings to people at addresses in a specific area that may be under threat. It is like an electronic door knock to deliver potentially lifesaving information. StateAlerts can be sent to an area as small as a suburban block through to an area as large as a local government shire.

It is a free service and all home phones, including silent numbers and mobiles are automatically registered. Mobile phones are automatically registered to people's customer address which may be different to where they live now. If people are not sure what address their mobile phone is registered to they should contact their service provider or register.

People also need to register if they want to receive alerts by email or for up to three additional addresses. They may want to register multiple addresses if they own more than one property, work away from home or have a relative with special needs.

StateAlert can only be used when authorities are aware that there is an emergency, have information available and there is time to issue a warning. It will not be used for every emergency and is only one tool used to warn communities.

Government websites, the media, especially ABC local radio, and telephone information lines are also good sources of information during emergencies. Individuals should always look after their own safety by monitoring local conditions and taking preventative action where possible.

Please go to www.statealert.wa.gov.au for more information or to register.
